About this tool

aloud reads text out loud on your own machine. There is no cloud service, no account, and nothing leaves your computer. The rendered page sits on one side and a voice reads it on the other, highlighting each sentence as it goes so your eyes can follow along or rest.

A short passage to listen to

The morning fog had not yet lifted from the harbor when the first boats slipped out past the breakwater. Gulls wheeled overhead, patient and unbothered, while the water turned from slate to silver under a widening sky. Somewhere a bell rang twice, and the town began, slowly, to wake.

Try selecting this paragraph and pressing play. The reader will start from the sentence you clicked, follow along word by word, and let you change the voice or the speed while it reads.
